The UTD School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics enjoys a strong tradition of academic excellence, world-class faculty, and a bright, diverse student body.

The School offers over forty undergraduate and graduate programs within its six departments: Molecular and Cell Biology, Chemistry, Geosciences, Mathematical Sciences, Physics, and Science/Mathematics Education.

Each program is research intensive with close cooperation from industry. Our faculty compete at the national level for sponsored research, and our graduates go on to pursue careers at colleges and universities as well as in industrial, medical, public health, environmental, and governmental organizations.

SCHOOL OF NATURAL SCIENCES AND MATHEMATICS
Proud sponsor of UTD Athletics. Go Comets!

There are worse things to be than an incoming student-athlete on the campus of The University of Texas at Dallas this year. After almost every program in the UTD Athletic Department saw significant contributors finish their careers at the end of last season, the "Help Wanted" signs are posted in force on the office doors of every coach in the UTD program.

The UTD women's soccer team may be trying to replace all-time scoring leader Natalie Taylor, but the freshman additions to last year's 15-3-1 squad that finished on the short end of a 1-0 overtime loss in the American Southwest Conference championship game give the Comets more depth and overall team speed than they've had before.

Volleyball coach Marci Sanders has her deepest and most talented squad in the three-year history of the program. And, with a solid base of returners from her first two years, she believes this team will take a big step forward toward becoming an ASC power.

to three consecutive post-season ASC championship tournaments, winning the title in 2005. Coach Terry Butterfield's 2006-07 squad has some significant returners in sharpshooter Martin Salinas and point guard Travis Caruthers, but he'll need to rebuild an inside game and look for additional scoring threats.

Softball coach Kim Sotomayor has a similar challenge with the UTD softball squad. She graduated almost half of her team from last season, including a number of standout players. The big challenge for the Comets in 2007 will be rebuilding a pitching staff that is in need of new talent.

And, finally, the individual sports of cross country, golf and tennis, are all expecting big things in 2006-07 from their newcomers as well as returning contributors. ■

Leadership Through Pride & Excellence

Parents, Fans, Faculty & Others...You Can Help Take The University of Texas at Dallas Athletic Program to the Next Level!

The University of Texas at Dallas is dedicated to developing the highest quality athletic program to compliment its outstanding reputation in academics. In order to accomplish these goals, UTD needs your help. The UT-Dallas Intercollegiate Athletic program receives no state funds and must rely on outside support in order to maintain the high standards we have established.

Donations to the UTD Comet Club can be designated by sport or placed in the general athletic fund to be used in many different ways to make our teams more competitive, enhance home athletic events for our fans, or improve the overall athletic experience for our student-athletes. By joining the Comet Club, you will have the opportunity to share in the success of our athletic teams.

Your generous contribution will make you part of UT-Dallas' commitment to developing an elite NCAA Division III athletic program. And, your contribution is completely tax-deductible.

Become a part of the UT-Dallas athletic program by joining the Comet Club. You'll receive recognition in our game program inserts, a periodic email newsletter and other perks as a member. It's a great way to keep in touch...and get into the game!

For more information, contact Albert Buckles at 972-883-6166, or your donation of $100 or more may be mailed to:
