

mitpressjournals.org

For Authors | MIT Press Journals

Author Posting Guidelines

16-20 minutes

MIT Press Journals Author Rights & Permissions Resources

Please contact the Permissions Department at journals-rights@mit.edu with any questions on the following information and links.

Jump to:

Submitting Publication Agreements

Author Posting Guidelines

Copyright Information

Author Reprints

Publishing Open Access

NIH Public Access Policy

Author Discounts

Kudos

Submitting Publication Agreements

If you have been instructed to return a signed copy of your publication agreement directly to MIT Press Journals, please mail, fax, or email the signed agreement to the Journals Production Department listed below. Please make sure to keep a copy of your agreement for your files.

Production Department

MIT Press Journals One Rogers Street Cambridge, MA 02142 Fax: 617-258-5028 Below are MIT Press' author guidelines and requirements for posting and archiving journal articles published in MIT Press journals. Subject to the limitations discussed below, MIT Press allows authors to share their work for noncommercial purposes via the following nonprofit websites:

- their institutional repository
- their personal webpages hosted at the institution
- their personal website
- nonprofit subject-specific repositories such as arXiv or similar
- applicable government websites

Please note that we do not consider either Academia.edu or Researchgate.net to be nonprofit sites and therefore do not allow posting of MIT Press content to either. If in doubt about whether a site is an acceptable location for posting your article please contact MIT Press at quik@mit.edu. Posting Policies by Publishing Timeline: Pre-acceptance of article in manuscript form:

- Authors may post freely

Post-acceptance of article, but pre-publication in a MIT Press journal: Authors may archive the final unpublished version (the version of the paper accepted by the journal for publication, including all modifications from the publishing peer review process) of their article on the approved sites listed above provided that they:

- Include a statement indicating that this is the author's final version, and that the article has been accepted for publication in [journal title]

Post-publication of final, reviewed, revised, typeset article in a MIT Press journal:

After the journal-specific embargo period (see below), authors may archive the final version of record of their article on the approved sites listed above provided that they include the following information with the posting:

- A complete citation
- A copyright statement
- A link to the journal's homepage

Open Access Compliance Policy for MIT Faculty Authors: In addition to the rights already granted to the author in their publication agreement, MIT faculty authors also retain the following non-exclusive rights:

1. An embargo-free right to provide, or to allow the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to provide, an electronic version of the final manuscript of the Article, including all modifications from the peer-review process and all graphics and supplemental materials associated with the manuscript (hereinafter the "peer-reviewed manuscript), to the National Library of Medicine's PubMed Central database ("PMC") at the time the Article is accepted for publication and to take any additional steps reasonably necessary to comply with NIH's Revised Policy on Enhancing Public Access to Archived Publications Resulting from NIH-Funded Research. (See full explanation of our NIH-Funded Policy)
2. To make, or to authorize others to make, the Article available in digital form through any digital repository at MIT, such as MIT's DSpace, provided such rights are not exercised before publication of the Article.

Embargo Periods: In the list below, please find the journal in which your article will be published and note the correct embargo period. An embargo is a period during which the author may not make the final published version of their work public in any way, such as submitting it to an institutional or governmental repository or posting to a personal website. The Embargo period is calculated from the Posted Online date found on the abstract page of your article, regardless of whether it first appears under “Just Accepted,” “Early Access,” or “Current” on our website. However, posting of the author’s final version is not embargoed.

Economics journals: 12 months (unless otherwise noted)

- American Journal of Health Economics
- Asian Development Review (*no embargo period – may republish under the terms of a CC BY license CC BY 3.0 IGO)
- Asian Economic Papers
- Education Finance and Policy
- The Review of Economics and Statistics

Science & Technology journals: 3 months (unless otherwise noted) (For NIH funded research, please see NIH-Funded Policy)

- Artificial Life
- Computational Linguistics
- Computational Psychiatry (*no embargo period – may republish under the terms of a CC BY 4.0 license)
- Evolutionary Computation
- Journal of Cognitive Neuroscience
- Linguistic Inquiry
- Network Neuroscience (*no embargo period – may republish under the terms of a CC BY 4.0 license)
- Neural Computation
- Open Mind (*no embargo period – may republish under the terms of a CC BY 4.0 license)
- Presence: Teleoperators and Virtual Environments

Arts & Humanities/International Affairs, History, & Political

Science: 6 months (unless otherwise noted)

- African Arts
- ARTMargins
- Computer Music Journal
- Daedalus
- Design Issues
- Global Environmental Politics
- Grey Room
- Innovations
- International Security
- Journal of Interdisciplinary History
- Journal of Cold War Studies (*12 month embargo period)
- Leonardo
- Leonardo Music Journal
- October
- PAJ: A Journal of Performance and Art
- Perspectives on Science
- TDR/The Drama Review
- The New England Quarterly

Copyright Information

The MIT Press, Copyright, and You We at MIT Press want you to understand copyright, its practical applications, and what we as your publisher and copyright agent will do to disseminate your article as widely and as effectively as possible.

The 1976 U.S. Copyright Law vests statutory copyright in an article with you or your employer. The right to publish an article can only be given by a written document from you. Without such a document, MIT Press would have permission for one-time publication, but not for the additional forms of dissemination that you, and those who would benefit from your research, have come to depend on.

MIT Press routinely receives requests for permission from:

- professors and universities wishing to copy articles for their students in both print and electronic format
- other publishers to include the article (or a portion of the article) in an edited collection of articles, or to translate the article for inclusion in a collection of articles in another language
- secondary publishers to include the entire contents of a journal in a microfilm, microfiche, or online archival collection, CD-ROM collections, or on-line databases of journals in a particular discipline
- document delivery companies that provide copies of articles on demand to individuals and libraries

In order to effectively fulfill the information requirements of your colleagues and others who would benefit from access to your research as noted above, MIT Press asks that you transfer the copyright for your article to MIT Press or to the Journal's sponsor. Why? We assume responsibility for preventing copyright infringement.

We register all of our publications with the Copyright Office of the Library of Congress.

We have existing relationships with all of the major information brokers. This enables MIT Press to act as an effective focal point for the administration of copyright licenses and applications.

We continually work to develop additional forms for dissemination of your article.

Some of these forms -- such as on-line databases, CD-ROMs of back issues, cumulative indices and abstract services in various formats or simple reprints -- are developed and administered by MIT Press. Other systems are made possible by sub-contracts with vendors such as the Copyright Clearance Center whose systems can only represent publications in their entirety.

We support your right to reuse your own material easily.

You can:

- Photocopy and distribute the article for your own academic or research purposes in paper or electronic form.
- Republish the article (or a revised version of the article) in another book you write, edit, or in an anthology you prepare, giving first publication credit to this journal. This applies only to books you author or edit as a whole. When only contributing to a chapter to a new work that someone else is working on, then that editor or publisher needs to contact us to get permission.
- Post your article on your own website or your institution's author repository, after the specified embargo period listed in your publication agreement, as long as you don't offer it for sale or commercial distribution. Such requests should be directed to the publisher. Please see our author posting guidelines.

Please Note: Material (text or illustrations) that has been reprinted by permission from third-party sources is, of course, not covered by this agreement unless full rights were given to you (see below).

What about multi-authored articles?

If there is more than one author of the Article, each author may submit a signed publication agreement, or the lead author may sign on behalf of all authors if he or she has the authority to act as their agent. Please check off the "for all authors" box if it is applicable on the publication agreement.

What about illustrations?

If an illustration is authored by you, and you wish to give MIT Press only one-time publication rights for it, please indicate this on your copyright transfer form, and we will not license the reuse of the illustration outside the context of the article. Otherwise, its reuse will be limited by your publication agreement.

What about material (text or illustrations) reprinted from other sources?

The author is legally responsible to comply with copyright laws and laws of privacy and libel. You must obtain such third-party permissions in advance of your article being published. This includes any illustration which you are using with permission from another copyright holder, such as a photographer, museum, or library. Copies of these permissions and/or release forms should be returned with your publication agreement as any permissions requests we receive for that material will need to be referred to the copyright holder.

These third party materials must be properly credited in the published article. If the person granting permission of an illustration or text specifies particular wording, those instructions must be followed. However, the copy editor of the article may make minor changes to conform to the journal's style. Some works have more than one source and each must be cited.

For example:

- A photo of a painting should have a credit line listing both the artist and the photographer.
(Sample: © 2013 John Smith. Photo by Chris Johnson)
- Translations should have a credit line of the author/copyright holder as well as the translator, if different.

(Sample: © 2013 John Smith. Translated by Chris Johnson).

Alternatively, a note mentioning the translator can be included in footnotes, the introduction, or another suitable location.

If you have additional questions, please contact:

Pamela Quick, Permissions Manager

Tel: 617-253-0080 Fax: 617-253-1709

quik@mit.edu or journals-rights@mit.edu

Author Reprints

To place an author reprints order, please use our online ordering system. You will need all of the following information to place your order:

- Title of the journal
- Volume and issue number*
- Page range*
- Lead author name
- Article title

* If you do not know the volume /issue or page range for your article, please contact the production coordinator directly (see the letter attached to your review proofs) or the journals team at journals-production@mit.edu. If you are ordering prior to publication, please be aware that your reprints order will not be processed and mailed until approximately two weeks after the issue is printed. Once mailed, shipping times will vary depending on your location. Please note that all customer service for this system is through the Sheridan Press (call 800-352-2210 ext 8175 or email Sheridan Customer Service). If you would like permission to reprint an article, please go to the Request Permission page.

Publishing Open Access

For information on how to publish your accepted MIT Press journal article as an Open Access document, please contact either Hannah Gotwals at gotwals@mit.edu or Pamela Quick at quik@mit.edu.

NIH Public Access Policy

The NIH Public Access Policy applies to publications that are:

- Peer-reviewed
- Accepted for publication on or after April 7, 2008
- A product of research that has been directly funded by the NIH

Submission: Your paper must be submitted to PubMed Central within 12 months of publication. We have assigned journal-specific embargo periods, which will determine when your paper will become live on the PubMed Central site. Upon submission, please enter our journal specific embargo period into the "Release delay" field, on the "Review and Approve Submission" page in the NIH Submission portal.

Important: Additionally, researchers are responsible for notifying publishers that a manuscript is subject to the NIH policy. For more information on this process, please visit the NIH Public Access page at <http://publicaccess.nih.gov>. If your Article is subject to the NIH Public Access Policy please make a note of this on your publication agreement. Do not check off the public domain box on the publication agreement simply because your article is subject to the NIH Policy. In order for the Public Domain law to apply, you must have created your work specifically in the course of your employment by the federal government.

Please Note: At this time, MIT Press does not submit articles on authors' behalf. You will need to do this yourself using the NIH Manuscript Submission System. Depositing a manuscript takes only a few minutes and can be done by the primary (lead) author or a third party. Instructions for depositing your article to PUBMED Central (as of 12/10/2009): What to Submit: An electronic version of the final, peer-reviewed manuscript including all graphics and supplemental material associated with the article. Please note that you will need permission from the publisher if you wish to submit the final publisher pdf. When to Submit: You may submit the final peer reviewed manuscript when it is ready, any time after acceptance for publication in the journal. Article will be made live subject to publisher's embargo periods, but no later than twelve months after publication. How to submit: Go to <http://nihms.nih.gov/>, label the manuscript with the correct author information, funding information (grant number, etc), and any other required information, then follow the prompts to finish the submission. If you have any questions regarding the requirements or process please contact the Journals Subsidiary Rights Department at journals-rights@mit.edu.

Author Discounts

Authors may order the print issue in which their article appears at 40% off the individual single issue rate. The 40% is deducted from the single issue rate prior to adding postage or GST. Postage is an additional $6.00 per copy shipped outside the U.S. and Canada. Canadians add 5% GST. Authors should request discounted copies from the Customer Service team.

The MIT Press and Kudos

In November 2015, the MIT Press became a publishing partner with Kudos, a service to “help researchers explain, enrich, and share their publications for greater research impact.” With just a few clicks, authors can claim their publications and promote them to the wider public. To learn more, click here.